The objective of American Ground Water Trust conference programs is to showcase topical and/or controversial groundwater issues and to facilitate information sharing among landowners, groundwater end-users, regulators, management agencies, scientists, engineers, lawyers and citizens who have economic or environmental interests in water resources.

2017 Focus: Quantitative Analyses and Water Resources Management: How far can we go?

Good water resources management and planning exists at the intersection of science, law, politics, and emotion. Solid science and engineering analyses are the foundation of any water resources management and planning exercise. However, to be successful, these analyses must be done in a way such that stakeholder acceptance is part of the process, and clearly solutions must be designed to be implemented within the current legal framework. Even the most robust scientific or engineering study may fail to sway the courts or stakeholders if it cannot be presented and argued in a manner that is easily digestible. Therein lies our challenge as scientists and engineers: to develop the best possible solutions which make sense technically, can be legally implemented, and enjoy stakeholder acceptance.

This conference will explore the intersection of science and engineering with some of the other key facets of water resources management and planning, and will feature speakers from the public and private sector, including planners and attorneys.

COMMUNICATING ABOUT WATER - CONNECTING OUR TECHNICAL UNDERSTANDING OF THE WEST'S GROUNDWATER AND SURFACE WATER CHALLENGES WITH THE POLITICIANS, POLICYMAKERS, AND THE PUBLIC WHO NEED THE INFORMATION TO FORGE A SUSTAINABLE AND RESILIENT FUTURE

John Fleck, Director, University of New Mexico Water Resources Program, Albuquerque, NM

John Fleck is Professor of Practice in Water Policy and Governance and Director of the University of New Mexico Water Resources Program. Much of his career was spent in journalism, focused since the 1980s on the interface between science and political and policy processes, with special emphasis on climate and water in the southwestern United States. He was the Water Resource program's writer-in-residence for three years before transitioning to academia full time in 2016. In the field of water resources, his primary interest is in nurturing the collaborative water governance needed to adapt to scarcity in the southwestern United States as populations grow while climate change reduces water supplies. That goal animates the Water Resources Program, where he and his colleagues work with graduate students who will become the region's future water managers. In both the Water Resources Program and the Department of Economics, he also works on translational activities – helping make the technical work done in academia of maximum benefit to political and policy processes.
