WHEN THE REAL WORK BEGINS: TAKING WATER PLANNING FROM DESIGN TO IMPLEMENTATION

Groundwater resources play an important role in New Mexico's drinking water supply in urban and rural areas. Additional water needs for mining, oil & gas, industry, agriculture, and for sustaining ecology add demand stress to an already limited supply. There are likely to be future constraints on stream flow dependability and aquifer recharge rates. Realistic water planning to achieve optimal use of the state's aquifers is essential if New Mexico is to achieve a long term sustainable supply/demand balance. The Annual New Mexico Groundwater Conference (Albuquerque, July 22-23) will explore the next frontiers in water planning and implementation with an emphasis on:

- Factoring in water availability to planning predictions for population growth and economic development
- Using sound science for quantifying the resource potential and assessing future hydrologic conditions
- Examining the feasibility of developing water supply engineering solutions and conjunctive use strategies
- Assessing possible legislative changes to regulatory authority and water management jurisdiction
- Reviewing how water rights and groundwater ownership may constrain planning options
